As Yokohama has served as a gateway to the outside world, it is the birthplace of many Japanese dishes.

What to eat in Yokohama

Napolitan
This dish is said to have been created by the head chef of the Hotel New Grand in Yokohama. You can enjoy it at the restaurant, The Cafe.

Sanmamen
This ramen dish is said to have been created by the successor to the founder of the long-established Chinese restaurant, Gyokuuentei.The noodles are covered in stir-fried vegetables like bean sprouts and cabbage in a thickened sauce.

Gyunabe (beef hotpot)
A flavor from when Japan westernized during the Meiji Period! "Gyunabe," which originated in Yokohama, is a dish in which meat and vegetables are placed into a pot for one and simmered until the ingredients are cooked.

Beer
The brewery that William Copeland started in 1870 in Yokohama was the first brewery in Japan and has continued to produce beer ever since.

Pancakes
Yokohama has a multitude of pancake restaurants, from famous overseas restaurants to pancake specialty restaurants beloved by local residents. You are bound to find one you like.

Bread
Yokohama has long accepted western culture and is a battle ground for bakeries. There are numerous attractive bakeries in Yokohama, ranging from the stylish to the traditional.

33 Yokohama Three Towers (King, Queen and Jack)
It is said that the nicknames for the three Yokohama Towers originates from foreign sailors at the beginning of the Showa Period naming the buildings after playing cards. The "King" used state-of-the-art building techniques to locate the tower in the center of the building as its symbol. The "Queen" is characteristic for its exotic dome that is reminiscent of Islamic mosques. The south-east corner of the "Jack" has a clock tower, the south-west corner an octagonal dome, and the north-west corner an angled dome.
